Desire for Disguise.

The millionaire was dining alone, and had much time to puzzle over an unusual phenomenon he had noted. "Why is it," he said, addressing the waiter, "that poor men usually give larger tips than rich men?" "Well, sir," was the reply, "looks to me that the poor man don't want nobody to find out that he's poor, and the rich man don't want nobody to find out that he's rich."

Deceptive Visions.

It was Wilderby's first acquaintance with the mountain scenery in Wales, and one fact struck him forcibly. "I think it so wonderful," he said, "that wherever you see a lot of mountains the smallest are always in front."

German Paper Suits.

A Dutch firm of importers of German goods in London is showing a range of suitings, tweeds, etc., which may be made up into men's suits at sixty cents to $2.50 a suit. These suits ("readymades") are manufactured from paper and cut to English styles. These paper "tweeds" and "cross breds" resemble the heavy rough cloth, both in appearance and feel. In fact there is nothing papery at all in either look or feel.

The firm dealing with these German goods, declare that at the present rate of exchange, it would be possible for an Englishman to be comfortably dressed in a new suit every week and the entire cost of the fifty-two new suits would be less than one single suit of West End cut and style and material.

Germany is using paper for every conceivable domestic necessity, and once the prejudice against paper articles is broken down, and their utility conceded, there will be an astonishing fall in prices. In Petticoat Lane and Clare Market, boot laces of paper are three pairs for two cents against one pair for six cents, and men's braces are twelve cents a pair, and warranted to hold up at that.

We most of us have tried a newspaper under a rug for extra warmth and found the value, so once we get used to the idea of paper garments there'll be a telling blow to the high cost of living.

LEAGUE HAS FRIENDS.

Root Upholds the Cause of Civilization.

WASHINGTON, Nov. 9.—Elihu Root has advised Senator Harding that "a new deal from the beginning by abandoning the Peace Treaty of Versailles is impossible and that to attempt it would bring chaos and an entire loss of the results of the war and general disaster involving the United States."

This advice, it can now be disclosed, was given by cablegram from London by Mr. Root during the latter part of August, and was an effort to keep Senator Harding from adopting the extreme position on the treaty and league which Senator Johnson was advocating.

The cablegram was sent partly as a result of an enquiry by Will Hays, chairman of the Republican National Committee, as to whether The Hague court could not be so defined as to include the work supposed to be the object of the League of Nations.

Mr. Root cabled that not only would it be unwise, but it would be untrue, to declare the League of Nations dead. He suggested that the only possible course was to keep the treaty, modifying it to meet the requirements of the Senate reservations, the Chicago platform, and probably in some other respects.

It is declared that when the Root cable came Senator Harding showed his displeasure, and it will be noted that in almost all the despatches sent out from Marion giving gossip about the future Cabinet, Mr. Root was not named for Secretary of State.

Although Senator Harding, in an address at Marion after his election, referred to the Treaty of Versailles as "deceased," the few friends of the treaty who know about Mr. Root's cable believe that Senator Harding must inevitably accept the Root view.

In Marion, however, there is a disposition to look upon Mr. Root as having advanced to such an old age as to be out of tune with the spirit of the last election result, and as having an affiliation with the international banking group as to make his advice of doubtful value. When President-elect Harding returns to his home it will become apparent exactly how much Elihu Root's advice will be taken on matters of foreign policy.

LEWIS IS THE VICTOR.

Succeeds Hon. Dr. Cody In Ontario Legislature.

TORONTO, Nov. 9.—Major Alex. Lewis, the Conservative candidate, was elected on Monday by a very substantial majority in Northeast Toronto to fill the vacancy left by the retirement of Hon. Dr. Cody from the Ontario Legislature. The by-election became unexpectedly bitter, especially after the personal attack made by Col. Burton upon the Conservative candidate. Col. Burton was commanding officer of the "Bantam" Battalion and Major Lewis the senior major. In a political speech, Col. Burton said he would sooner "sleep with a snake than with Major Lewis." The Conservative candidate retorted by showing that he had reverted to go to France while Col. Burton came home. This evidently was approved by other personalities, but Major Lewis came home at the poll with a lead of 3,600 votes over the Liberal candidate.

The Vote:

Lewis	7,749
Kippen	4,185
Higgins	3,888
Galbraith	86
Lewis' majority over all	1,640
Lewis' plurality over Kippen	3,564

The size of the Conservative candidate's plurality over Kippen was surprising in view of the smallness of the vote. The total vote was less than one-half that polled in Seat B in the general election, and considerably less than the vote in the by-election of 1918, when the certainty of Hon. Dr. Cody's election kept the voters away from the polls.

THREE IN THE FIELD.

Nominations for Federal Election In East Elgin.

AYLMER, Ont., Nov. 9.—As anticipated, the election contest will be a three-cornered one in East Elgin. Nominations were made Monday, the names of the candidates being: Hon. Lawrence Stansell, Farmer, Strafford-ville (Conservative); William Granville Charlton, teacher, Wellandville (Liberal); and Sydney Smith McDermand, Farmer, Port Burwell (United Farmer).

Following nominations, candidates have arranged speaking campaigns. Stansell will hold two meetings each night, being assisted by J. W. Edwards, M.P., Hon. Charles McCrae, John Best, M.P., and J. C. Hodgins, Brampton. Mr. McDermand will be assisted by J. J. Morrison, R. H. Burnaby, R. H. Habert and A. A. Powers. Mr. Charlton is carrying on his campaign practically unassisted in so far as speaking is concerned, but has arranged for Hon. Mackenzie King to speak in Aylmer on Nov. 18. T. A. Crerar will speak for McDermand on Nov. 19.

The Prime Minister will probably conclude his speaking tour by a meeting in Aylmer on Friday evening, Nov. 20. On the previous day Mr. Meighen will speak in Toronto.

One of Four Millions

(A Photograph Direct from the War-Stricken Area)

$1 per Month Preserves the Life of One Child

Millions of war orphans in Central Europe are growing up undernourished and stunted.

Thousands of them are dying of typhus, tuberculosis and small-pox.

There is almost a complete lack of the nourishing foods growing children need, of clothing, of doctors, nurses and medical supplies. The condition of the children is pitiable in the extreme.

Upon this coming generation depends largely whether these nations will be healthy and right-minded or a hot-bed of anarchy and degeneracy—a menace to the world.

It has been found by experience that the cost of caring for a waif child is approximately three dollars per month; that of the supplies that are required by imports about one dollar is needed; and therefore the dollar that we provide, together with the local support of local governments, local municipalities, local charities and local services practically preserves the life of one child.

CATTLE MARKETS

TORONTO LIVE STOCK.

TORONTO, Nov. 9.—With a heavy run of cattle on the Union Stock Yards market yesterday, around 6,500 head, exclusive of those billed through, there was a very fair demand for nearly all classes, but prices were ten half a cent lower.

The market for heavy weight steers was a good 50c lower, but there was a very fair inquiry for the bready stockers and feeders, but on the whole we think they sold at lower levels. The canner trade was very slow, and 50c lower than last week.

Good butcher cows met with a good inquiry, and canners and cutters, as stated, were a half a dollar lower.

There was a fairly good demand for the better class of milch cows, and they sold at steady prices or a little better. The bull trade held about steady.

SPRACKLIN ACQUITTED

Jury Finds Preacher Was Justified in Shooting.

License Inspector Claims That He Acted In Self-defence, But Friends of Dead Man Contradict His Statement—Climax of Long Series of Near-tragedies In Border Whiskey Running.

WINDSOR, Nov. 9.—Rev. J. O. L. Spracklin, special license inspector of Essex county, was justified in the shooting of Beverly Trumbel of the Chappell House here last Saturday morning.

A coroner's jury Monday morning after brief deliberation, and following pointed addresses from Coroner J. S. Labelle and Crown Attorney J. H. Rodd, found that Rev. Mr. Spracklin had shot in self-defense.

The climax to a long series of near-tragedies in connection with the liquor traffic on this border came early Saturday, when Rev. J. O. L. Spracklin, pastor of the Sandwich Methodist Church, and also a special License Inspector, shot and killed Clarence Beverly Trumble at the Chappell House, Sandwich, of which Trumble was the proprietor.

Spracklin fired a single shot into the hotelman's body at a range of less than six inches, the bullet entering the left groin and emerging at the back. Trumble crumpled into the arms of a companion, Edward Smith, and died within 15 minutes. He bled to death.

At the inquest Saturday night Spracklin said he fired in self-defence. "It was his life or mine," he declared.

Feeling ran high throughout the border cities Sunday night, and the police said they had heard open threats to "shoot Spracklin on sight." The minister was being detained at police headquarters for his own safety. Provincial officers took extraordinary precautions to prevent disorders at the inquest, which attracted a large crowd.

During the day members of Mr. Spracklin's congregation raised $10,000 for his defence, should charges be brought against him, and pledged $200,000 for his bond. They declared the church was prepared to "go the limit" in providing funds and other assistance their pastor might require.

Almost immediately after firing the fatal shot Spracklin left the hotel, went to his home, a short distance away, and told his wife what he had done. Then, entering his Government-owned automobile, he drove a mile and a half to the Windsor police headquarters and surrendered himself to Night Sergt. Jones.

At that time the pastor-inspector was unaware that he had killed Trumble, and believed his shot had caused only a flesh wound. Spracklin was not locked up, but was placed in the detention room, where he remained until Saturday evening, when at 9 o'clock, under a heavy guard, he was taken in a swift police car to Sandwich Court House, where he testified before Coroner J. S. Labelle and a jury as to his part in the affair.

At the conclusion of his testimony the minister was again removed from the court room and went to Chatham accompanied by an officer.

The decision to take Spracklin to Chatham for safekeeping was arrived at as a result of the expressed opinion of R. L. Brackin, counsel for the minister, that he did not think his client's life would be safe if his whereabouts became known.

The tragedy, although a shock to the community, had been generally expected for some time. Threats had been made openly that Inspector Spracklin's life "would not be worth a nickel."

The story of the shooting, as related by witnesses at the inquest, showed that between 2 and 2.30 o'clock Saturday morning Inspector Spracklin, with four of his aides, had just returned from a tour of Windsor and its environs, the inspector being at his way home. The Spracklin home is less than half a block from the Chappell House in Sandwich.

As the two machines carrying the license sleuths drew up in front of the Spracklin home, Spracklin saw three other cars standing in front of the hotel. Walking down to the spot he saw a man half crouched over on the lawn, with his face in his hands, through which a thin streak of blood trickled. "Bev." Trumble, proprietor of the hotel, stood conversing with the man.

"It's Ernie Deslippe. He had a little trouble and got his nose punched," was the boniface's reply. Then, as the pastor began to ask Deslippe questions, Trumble walked into the hotel and locked the door.

Bounding up the steps, Spracklin, with his four assistants behind him, attempted to get in, but faces looked out from behind the curtains in the glass door, while a revolver is said to have flashed in the hands of one of the men inside.

Dividing his men into two squads, one half going to the rear and the others, including Spracklin, remaining on the front verandah of the hotel, an effort was made to get into the house. A window facing the street was found unlocked, and through this the five license inspectors entered the room.

"Then," said Spracklin, testifying at the inquest, "we were met by 'Bev.' Trumble. He looked at me for a second and then his hand went to his pocket. He pulled a gun and yelled to me:

"'Spracklin, this is my fight. Get out of here or I'll kill you.'

"It was then I drew my pistol and shot, to save my own life."

A burning cigarette he held in his hand fell from his fingers, and in less than ten minutes Trumble was dead.

Trumble's widow and several other friends, however, declared Trumble was unarmed. Local police who made an investigation said they had been unable to find the pistol Spracklin claims the dead man had drawn upon him.

TREATY TO BE CHANGED

Allies Will Revise the Important Points.

Entente Powers Make an Announcement Regarding Intentions—Reparation Commission Instructed to Submit Findings to Great Britain and France Who Will Have the Final Say Regarding Acceptance.

PARIS, Nov. 9.—The revision of the Versailles treaty has been decided upon by France and Great Britain, according to the official agreement just published, by which both of these countries agree to postpone the fixing of the amount of the German indemnity and the modalities necessary to enforce payments until after the plebiscite in Upper Silesia.

While the treaty stipulates that the Reparations Commission shall be the sole judge of the question of German indemnity, France and Great Britain announced that the commission is only to study the technicalities involved in order to draw up a report which will be submitted to the allied Premiers for discussion and final decision.

According to the most reliable diplomatic opinion here, the new France-British agreement makes a momentous change in the allied policy and constitutes public acknowledgement of the impossibility of applying the treaty in its present form without important concessions to Germany.

The treaty also did not contemplate subjecting the amount of the reparations and the entire question to settlement apparently without the participation of the United States. Whether the new agreement is a French or a British victory is a question now puzzling experts.

French official opinion seems delighted in expectation that the reparation experts will submit to the allied Premiers an itemized bill for compensations amounting well over two hundred billion francs in gold. The payment of this sum in full will be insisted upon by France under threat of invasion of the Ruhr Valley.

The procedure embraces as its first stage a conference of experts at Brussels; second, a meeting of allied and German representatives at Geneva; third, consideration by the Reparations Commission of the findings of the first two conferences; and, fourth, a meeting of the Premiers to consider the commissions' decisions.

According to the Petit Parisien a full agreement has not been reached concerning the procedure in the fourth stage, regarding guarantees and penalties, which it says the Supreme Council should provide.

The Figaro says the agreement deprives the Reparations Commission of none of its rights, but that it will fix the amount of Germany's debt and decide as to her solvency, as France has contended it should.

It is expected the first two stages will be covered in time to allow the Geneva conference to finish its work by the middle of February.

ECHO OF GREAT WAR.

Americans Keener Than Canadians to Get Profit Out of It.

OTTAWA, Nov. 9.—Judgment was given by Mr. Justice Audette in the Exchequer Court on Saturday in the case of the Bauer Chemical Co. versus the Sanatogen Co. of Canada and William W. Barry, the finding being in favor of the Bauer Chemical Co. The case was the first that has been tried since the war involving the rights to trade marks covering the sale of German products sold in Canada and it confirms the claims of the plaintiffs, an American company, to rights sold to them by the American Trade Custodian.

In England the official controller seized the business of the branch established by the Berlin firm of Bauer & Co., voided their trade marks and forfeited and sold their business. In the United States, after entering the war, the American branch of this Berlin firm, incorporated into a company, was also forfeited and sold to the plaintiffs in the case just concluded.

The judgment points out that although the Canadian Government passed a number of orders-in-Council under the War Measure Act, respecting trading with the enemy, no enactment can be found depriving the plaintiffs in this case of the ownership of the trade marks in question. The judgment states that the sale by the American custodian has purged any taint of German ownership and that the American company are entitled to the trade marks in question. "The action," says the judgment, "is based upon a sale, or title derived from the Government of a friendly nation allied with Canada in the war, and the Canadian legislation and orders-in-Council respecting trading with the enemy do not affect such a transaction."

BRITAIN'S ANCIENT ANIMALS.

White Park Herds Descendants of Wild Cattle.

The White Park cattle of Great Britain are the direct descendants of the wild cattle that roamed the country before the Romans ranged it. The imperial legions of Caesar did not confiscate the stocks they found when they came — the stocks then domesticated by the ancient Welsh and others. They helped to preserve them, and so did the Druids, who were the chief religious folk of that time. Because they were white cattle they were looked upon with some religious respect; indeed these white bovines were called "druidic cattle," and later were used as tribute money for fair pilgrims to the shrine of St. Edmunds whenever their prayers were granted presented the abbey then controlled by monks, with a fine white bull descended from the Druidical stock. The Druids used white cattle in their sacrifices, and partly from their selective scarcity and uniformity of color the cattle were rendered objects of deathless superstition. The monks who owned them in succession to the Druids (who had been pushed into Wales as the Roman legions fought their way north) were, of course, the foremost agriculturists of their day, and they kept records of the cattle bred. Those records were preserved in the monasteries. When the Reformation came, and the monasteries were dissolved, the stock was dispersed all over the kingdom, and was blended with the common local varieties—Dunlhorns, Ashhorns, Longhorns, black polled, red-coated and black-coated. But some 50 pure-bred herds were enclosed on certain large private parks. The Argyle herd, more or less wild and mad because of close inbreeding, and nothing was done to save them from extinction until two years ago, when Sir Claude Alexander, Bart., Ayrgate Wood, Pirgate, Suffolk, appealed to the Council of Agriculture, Live Stock Journal, to establish the breed on herd book lines. Sir William Shakespeare, Lord Lieutenant of North Wales, Lord Tankerville in Northumberland, John Cator, Quintin Gurney and T. H. Case in Norfolk, and Messrs. Dawkins and Cocks and others from other parts of the country got together, and with the aid of a little publicity and propaganda the thing was done. The first White Park Herd Book is on the printers' stocks, and the first open classification for the breed will be seen at the Darlington Royal Show in 1920.

These White Park Cattle are both horned and polled. I saw the horned ones, they are so docile. The monks preserved the polled animals because they were easier of domestication and did not revert to the antics of their ancient ancestors. But both types possess genuine utility; if anything the polled cattle are the better milkers. The cows give a considerable volume of milk, and present a butcher's carcass when their dairying days are done. Beef carcasses from the Cator and Dawkins' herds have caused surprise when marketed commercially. As to the polled type's milking abilities, I append the production records of some cows in the herds of John Cator, Woodbastwick, Norfolk, and Major Quintin Gurney, at Bawdeswell, Norwich, in the same county of England; Woodbastwick Blue Bell 2nd, 11,952 pounds of milk; Bawdeswell Countess, 11,853 pounds; Bawdeswell Alberta, 11,368 pounds; Woodbastwick Blanche 2nd., 11,033 pounds; Woodbastwick Princia 1st, 10,716 pounds, Woodbastwick Poverty 4th, 10,604 pounds, and Bawdeswell Elfrida, 10,000 pounds.

The actual origin and evolution of the breed sounds like a legend. But it is nothing of the kind. It is good to know that the work of American breed societies in the standardization of the scrub sire and the vast increase in the registration of pedigree stock has a counterpart on the another part of the world of the early herd bookkeeping done by our monkish folks hundreds of years ago.

Japanese Star Relief Fund.

TOKIIO, Nov. 9.—A group of leading Japanese business men opened up a country-wide campaign Sunday to secure a Genuine Relief Earthquake Fund. The list was opened by two subscriptions for $15,000 and one for $12,500 gold. The method for distribution of the fund has not been decided upon, but it is suggested that the Japanese and American Red Cross organizations might co-operate in the famine region.

San Marco Occupied by d'Annunzio.

TRIESTE, Nov. 9.—Gabriele d'Annunzio, Italian insurgent commander at Fiume, has occupied the promontory of San Marco, south of Barcari, with 400 troops as a protest against the alleged firing by Serbian coast guards on the Italian steamer Issoria, from Ancona.

D'Annunzio's troops are now facing the Jugo-Slav frontier.

A Strange Fire.

A pile of blankets for a hospital left for several hours on the back porch of the home of Mrs. Cecil Clay, Belfast, was set on fire by the sun's rays passing through a large cavity of spring water, behind which they were placed.

Canada In the League

POPULAR interest in the League of Nations will likely increase with the definite making of arrangements for the first meeting of the assembly, called for Geneva in November.

Until now, the Council of the League alone has met, consisting of the four permanent members, Great Britain, France, Italy and Japan, and the four provisional members, Spain, Brazil, Belgium and Greece.

The assembly, however, will have a long list of attendants, including the complete membership of the League.

There is an advantage in giving this complete list, not as a dry catalogue, but as helping to visualize the extent of the League. The states who have been notified to send delegates are:

Argentine Republic.
Belgium.
Bolivia.
Brazil.
British Empire—
Canada,
Australia,
India,
New Zealand,
South Africa.
Chili.
Colombia.
Cuba.
Czecho-Slovakia.
Denmark.
France.
Greece.
Guatemala.
Hedjas.
Italy.
Japan.
Liberia.
Netherlands.
Norway.
Panama.
Paraguay.
Persia.
Perú.
Poland.
Portugal.
Roumania.
Salvador.
Serb-Croat-Slovene State.
Siam.
Spain.
Sweden.
Switzerland.
Uruguay.
Venezuela.

In this list, it is generally interpreted that the British Empire includes Great Britain and Ireland, Newfoundland and those portions not included in the self-governing dominions, while Canada, Australia, New Zealand and South Africa as well as India are mentioned independently and specifically.

Several additional states have asked to be admitted to the assembly of the League, including Iceland, Finland, Esthonia, Latvia, Lithuania, Luxemburg, Monaco, San Marino, Liechtenstein, Georgia, the Ukraine and Armenia.

The assembly will decide as to the admittance of these states.

It is expected there will be any serious discussions as regards their accession. There remains the question of the admittance to the League of the ex-enemy states, and in particular of Germany, should they apply for entry.

One of the most important questions will be the relation of the council and the assembly. The covenant of the League of Nations defined in the most general terms this relation. In practice, the council is the powerful as a cabinet. Whether this power will rest on the ultimate acquiescence and support of the assembly is doubtful.

Canada has a seat in the assembly, but except through Great Britain is not represented on the council.

The co-existence of these two bodies in the organism of the League represents, it is declared, a sort of compromise between the two principles of theoretical legal equality of all states, large and small, and the actual predominance of the Great Powers. The former principle is manifested in the council; the latter in the assembly.

The assembly at least provides a forum for the "smaller states." They will be able to raise many questions which affect them, especially those concerning the political or economic predominance of some Great Power or group of powers, by whom they may consider their own interests are injured. Whatever may be the immediate practical effect of protests of this kind, they cannot fail, it is expected by the League's sponsors, to have a moral effect which, in the long run, may also have practical efficacy. Thirty-one States will meet on a footing of equality, and be free at least to discuss any argument which they choose. It will permit the states not represented on the council to make known their aspirations and to develop their activity in the sphere of the League of Nations.

Canadians do not look with unconditional pleasure at being designated a "smaller" state, although recognizing that size isn't virtue. In our case, however, "younger" would be a more accurate word.

Newfoundland May Come In.

According to Sir John Aird, general manager of the Bank of Commerce, Newfoundland is very favorably disposed towards a union with the Maritime Provinces, and ultimately into the Canadian Confederation, although the inhabitants of the oldest colony were much more favorably disposed towards the Maritime than to Upper Canada. Sir John stated that the Maritime Provinces are in need of an aggressive colonization policy to develop their latent resources. He states that the prospects for Newfoundland and their standing in the bond market is quite as good as that of Ontario or Quebec.

Men Forced Out.

The male residents of the town of Arcola, Sask., have lost their voice in the administration of Public school affairs in that place. When the board dismissed D. S. Williams as principal of the High school, such a protest was raised that the board quit in a body and an election called. The result showed that with one exception all women had been returned. Their first official act was to restore the dismissed school principal to his former position.

Talented English Youth Gives Up Wealth and Fame And Will Enter a Monastery

RENOUNCING fame, fortune and the friendship of royalty, including the intimate companionship of the Prince of Wales, the future heir to the crown of Great Britain and his companions, such is the reported step taken by the Hon. Evan (Frederic) Morgan, only son and heir of Lord Tredegar, one of the wealthiest of the English "Coal Kings." This peer's son, young in years, but already famed as a poet and artist, has traveled with the Prince of Wales.

Now it is reported from Cardiff, Wales, that Evan Morgan will renounce all things worldly in order to enter a monastery and devote the remainder of his life to the church. It is said young Mr. Morgan but lately left the monastery of Santa Rosalia, where he had been studying the lives of the monks, and where he had been in cloisters for some days with the Franciscan friars. So far it has not been revealed just what further circumstances, if any, influenced this talented youth to take such a step.

That he gives up first of all much wealth is evident. Lord Tredegar, the father, is the third son of the first Baron Tredegar, the title having been created in 1859. The wife and mother is the former Lady Carnegie, daughter of the Earl of Southesk. Lord Tredegar is widely known as a clubman and sportsman, his hobbies including hunting, shooting, fishing and golf, with a beautiful 40,000-acre farm as the centre of his athletic activities. From the standpoint of wealth some idea of the extent of Lord Tredegar's holdings may be gained from the fact that during recent hearings of the Coal Commission Lord

Child Eats Tablets With Fatal Results.

On Friday afternoon October 31st, the youngest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John Kimmett, of Ernestown, suffered almost instant death from eating several tablets from a paper-box which in play she had found upstairs in the house. Though little tablets, when taken according to directions were not regarded as poisonous, such an overdose taken by one so young caused violent convulsions, from which she never recovered. Mr. C. Brethen hurried the child and mother in a car to Dr. Galbraith. Dr. Vrooman was instantly summoned and the two physicians did all in their power to save the little one, but she died a few minutes after reaching Napanee.

New Year's Eve. Dance.

The Dominion Government has kindly granted the use of the Napanee Armouries to the Napanee Driving Park Association Committee for an Informal Dance New Year's Eve., December 31st. The object of the dance is to endeavor to make enough money to finish the inside of the skating rink with proper seating capacity and accommodation for the players. The Driving Park has already paid $1000.00 to get the rink extended seventy feet to make it the regulation size, and have expended far more money on the grounds than was made this year. The money is urgently needed and it is expected the young people of the town and county will favor the dance with a bumper crowd, as the new rink will be one of the most enjoyable sources of amusement the town has ever had and will fill a long felt want.

A full house is confidently expected and the lecture will begin at eight o'clock sharp. No admission fee is charged and an invitation is extended to all. A machine gun captured from the Germans and presented to the Society will be on exhibition.

The Seeing Eye.

Principal Reynolds, of the Ontario Agricultural College, thus delivers himself in the Agricultural Gazette, of Canada : The teacher who hopes to take a right place in the life of the country school district must cultivate the seeing eye and the understanding heart for persons and things rural. The usual, popular, melodrama, comic supplement, moving picture conception of the farmer and of country people must be forgotten. It is essentially and pernicously false. The farmer is something of a humorist, and takes delight in deceiving the simple-minded by a somewhat unfinished exterior. The city-bred person makes the fatal mistake of judging by outside appearances. To the city-trained eye there are two classes of persons, one wearing overalls and the other wearing white collars. The former class work with their hands. The later class work with their brains. That is the superficial judgement which ignores the fact that there is a very great deal of clear, hard thinking done to-day by the men wearing overalls. At any rate, the farmer belongs to both classes. The more he understands of those discoveries, which it is the business of the agricultural college to make, the more he absorbs the teaching which it is the business of the college to spread abroad, the better farmer will he be.

The complete arrangements have not been made for the other artists, but we can promise that they will be of a high order.

Police Court Case Dismissed.

A. B. Cunningham brought out an interesting point in the case of Arthur Babcock, who was brought before Magistrate Farrell, as a result of a number of automobiles using the highway under construction between Kingston and Odessa, on September 24th, the day of the Odessa fair. Babcock allowed several autos to take a "short cut" through his property, in order to get into the roadway under construction, and it is alleged that he charged a fee of fifty cents for each auto. The point taken by Mr. Cunningham was to the fact that Babcock was charged with "aiding and abetting," and under the criminal code, a person who aids is just as guilty of the offense as one who committed it, but Mr. Cunningham held that the accused must be prosecuted under the Ontario Statutes, and not under the criminal code. Magistrate Farrell said he had been looking up the law in regard to the case and considered that Mr. Cunningham was quite right in his contention and that he would dismiss the case against Babcock, J. L. Whiting was present on behalf of the prosecution.—Kingston Whig.

A SQUARE DEAL TO ALL UNIVERSITIES

The announcement from Toronto that a Royal Commission has been appointed by the Provincial Government to enquire into the financial affairs of the universities of Ontario, will not be unwelcome to this section of the province. For some time there has been a growing feeling among thoughtful men, not alone in Eastern Ontaro but in all Ontario outside Toronto, that there has been an inequitable distribution of provincial funds for educational purposes throughout the province. While other universities have been obliged practically to crawl on their hands and knees to the Government for assistance to carry on educational work which is necessary if the communities which these universities serve are to be properly cared for in an educational way, the provincial university has cooly proceeded to demand as of right grants to that institution which to the men of the outside have seemed quite out of proportion to the work which that university is doing as compared with other universities.

Not that, for an instant there is any desire to minimize the value of the work of Toronto University, or to take from it any of the credit which properly belongs to it because of its excellent educational facilities and achievements. But while this is so it is to be recalled that the Province of Ontario has at present a population of over two and a half million people and that the old idea of a central or so-called Provincial University can serve the educational needs of these people has been outgrown. The plain fact is that it is not in the interests of the province as a whole that there should be undue favoritism toward Toronto University as certainly there has been these many years. The money devoted to educational purposes is money derived from the people, and it is inequitable as well as unjust that while other universities are often down on their marrow-bones asking a fair share of the money that comes from all the people the Provincial Toronto University has been finding a larger and larger place in the sun.

Happily under the Drury Government there has been unmistakable signs of a recognition of the unequal conditions that have prevailed for many years in this respect—unmistakable signs, also, of a desire on the part of the Government, no longer to ignore the universities outside of Toronto but to give them a square deal. That this spirit will be further evidenced we believe, as we believe also that the findings of the Royal Commission will help along the good work.—Kingston Standard.

Edmonton Has Freak Railway

IT'S a railway that just simply wouldn't seem to behave. What would you do with a railway like that?

One day quiet and steady as a frozen river, the next, rocky and groggy as the ice in spring—one day drowsily asleep in the sunshine, the next, up-ending itself in some mad prank.

With "The Road That Wouldn't Behave" it is the unexpected that happens. When some months ago it rolled over upon its side and went to sleep, keeping a distinguished judicial party, hastening home for a court appointment, stalled for days with nothing to do but admire the scenery, everybody—but the party—laughed. They started with one engine, they ended the trip hauled by four, which says something for the weight of the law.

Its trains run so far behind schedule that the Man in the street says the trainmen are supplied with calendars instead of watches. Its rolling stock is so erratic that there is a story told of one train that went off the rails nine times in seventeen miles. Its employes get the highest wages paid by any road, because only so can they be tempted to remain.

For months its management has been "fed up" with its responsibility and has been seeking some one courageous enough to shoulder the mischievous burden. One after another proved unequal to the undertaking, but now success has crowned its efforts, and a new era has begun.

For, with all this, the Edmonton, Dunvegan and British Columbia Railway is a good road. It has not been kept to the point of highest efficiency, its rolling stock is woefully in need of additions and repairs, and its roadbed needs attention. Yet it is a road with tremendous possibilities. At its birth its roadway was well graded and well built, but it is a colonizing road, and like most such have done, it is now passing through its time of stress and trial.

It was started in 1913, and continued under various conditions during the war. It runs northwest from Edmonton to the B.C. boundary, 411 miles, and is designed to serve the great Peace River country. At this date 357 miles of the road are in active under operation, with a branch, fifty miles long, from Spirit River to Dunvegan, and another fifty-mile branch, known as the Central of Canada railway, north from McLennan to Peace River. The line is planned to run northerly to Fort Vermilion, and westerly to near Dunvegan.

The present mileage, while still inadequate, makes possible the transportation of the crops from the Peace River country, as the service is augmented by boat transportation of the Peace River, which is navigable for 650 miles.

The principal towns along the line are Peace River, Spirit River, Sexsmith, Clairmont, Grand Prairie and Westlock, 52 miles from Edmonton. These towns have shown quite remarkable progress since the inception of the road, and the rate of immigration has been very heavy. Last year's crop was about five million bushels of mixed cereals, and there are about 60,000 head of cattle in the Peace River country, with a population of thirty-five or forty thousand people.

The climate is surprising. The favorable conditions for the growth of all mixed cereals is due partially to the frequent chinook winds during the winter; a very reliable rainfall during summer; and also to the particularly long hours of daylight. The sun shines sixteen or seventeen hours during the long days, and daylight last for twenty-one hours.

The Peace River country is essentially fitted for mixed farming, and will raise anything from radishes to No. 1 hard wheat. The country is well watered, although in some places far away from rivers, deep wells are needed. The soil is particularly heavy, and will stand many years of working before artificial fertilizing becomes necessary.

Near the British Columbia boundary is a large deposit of high-grade semi-anthracite coal; the large lakes abound in delicious fish; large tracts are covered with marketable timber, and everywhere the natural beauty of the country is unsurpassed.

Just now there is much activity in the search for oil, and developments already completed point to its undoubted existence in large quantities. Gas, too, occurs in a variety of places, and the natural outlet for fur from this part of the country running into figures of which run to a very substantial sum—is along this line.

When all is finished, working under the great handicap of last year's conditions, carried into Edmonton, 797 carloads of lumber, 154 cars of slabs, 456 of ties, 417 of wheat, 1,278 of hay, 227 of cattle, 30 of horses, 134 of hogs, 30 of sheep, 482 of oats, 213 of coal, and many carloads of other things, besides large quantities of supplies into the north country, some idea is revealed of its future. When its rolling stock and equipment are adequate to its requirements, and the country becomes settled and over its pioneering days. What its future may be if oil, etc. are found as expected, cannot be imagined.

Ontario benefits through this railway, far away though it be, as in 1919 of the 30 carloads of fish shipped from Lesser Slave Lake, part were shipped to Ontario's capital city.

There is no doubt whatever, that now the C.P.R. has taken it over, the E. D. & B. C. Ry. ere long will become one of the biggest business-getters in that coterie of "near-railways" already taken over and absorbed by the great transcontinental systems.

Battlefield Sign Posts.

Profiting by war-time experience the French Ministry of Transport is replacing the familiar small metal direction signs by the large guide posts and notices which were found so useful in the battle zone.

Some of the old battlefield signposts deserve preservation. There was the pathetic board on the Somme that announced "Guillemont once stood here," the notice at Zillebeke Lake, "Don't waste bombs on fish —throw them at Fritz," and the board at Albert, surmounting a heap of rubbish, and stating simply, "Cathedral."—London Chronicle.

CONFINED TO BED FOR TWO MONTHS

Was so Run Down After the "Flu" She Couldn't do Her Housework—Grateful to Tanlac.

So many people throughout Canada have testified to having used Tanlac with such splendid results following influenza, grippe operations, typhoid and pneumonia, and other troubles that result in a run-down condition, that it has become universally recognized as the most powerful reconstructive tonic of the present day.

Another very striking statement in connection with this fact was given recently by Lyman Williams, well-known farmer, living on R. F. D. No. 1, Vinemont, Ontario.

"Last February," said Mr. Williams, "my wife was taken down with the "flu" and was confined to her bed for two months. It left her in such a badly run-down condition that she wasn't able to do any of her housework whatever and nothing seemed to restore her strength. Her appetite was very poor and her stomach was in such a bad fix that she could only eat the lightest kind of food. She had awful headaches lasting for a day or two at a time and was simply in perfect misery.

"She saw Tanlac so highly recommended by others that my wife decided it would be a good idea to try it, so we got her a bottle and she began to improve from the very start. Her appetite picked right up, and after taking four bottles she says she never has an ache or pain of any kind. She has gained all her lost weight and can do her housework with perfect ease. My wife is so grateful for what Tanlac has done for her that she is always telling the neighbors about it, and I'm no less thankful than she is for her recovery."

Tanlac is sold in Napanee at WALLACE'S Drug Store, in Camden East by R. J. OSTER, in Waggaville by S. JACKSON.

Sir Walter Scott's Mother.

In the course of an interesting article in the Cornhill Magazine, Archibald Stalker, writing of Sir Walter Scott's mother, says:

"She had about £300 a year, of which a good third went in charities of her own. On the remainder she was able to keep a quietly hospitable home. But of his superabundance Sir Walter often offered her assistance, which was scornfully and affectionately refused every time. She lived to see her same son a dramatist to read not only his verses, but his novels, and to point out to her visitor the discrepancies between Waverley and the real story.

"He attributed a good deal of his knowledge of the manners and habits of the lower orders to the confidences of his conversation. She had a fine memory and a gift for telling stories, had all the Scottish passion for genealogy, and the battle of the ancestry of everybody she knew or had ever heard of. She had proverbs also for every occasion, and two of them were often on Sir Walter's mouth: 'We must do as we do,' that is, as we can do, and

'Will bides
Her that bides.'

Both of these illustrate a patient mind and a happy knack of minimizing present trouble."

Costumed Appropriately.

When Aunt Helen kept company with a young lieutenant in the army she prevailed on her seven-year-old nephew to wear a soldier overcoat. The young lieutenant was succeeded by a boy scout receive, and Bonny received a boy scout uniform, which he had to wear to please his auntie. But the boy scout executive and Aunt Helen have disagreed and Bonny has been much interested in knowing who will be his successor in winning Aunt Helen's attentions. The other day he made a discovery, and came running in the house to tell mother about it. "Oh, mother," he began, "you might as well get me a Prince Albert coat, a white vest and a tie. Aunt Helen is beginning to warm up to the minister."

Bermuda to Celebrate.

Bermuda, the oldest remaining British "plantation," is preparing to celebrate its tercentenary this autumn, for which purpose £2,000 have been appropriated. Since the Prince of Wales announced the other day that he meant to pay a call on his loyal subjects, they hit on the scheme of combining two festive occasions and having one grand affair on October 7, when the Renown, with the heir to the throne aboard, is to cast anchor there.

It was August 1, 1620, that the Colonial Parliament held its first sitting, but as the royal engagements cannot very well be altered, it was thought wise to set back the gala date.

For nearly 300 years the business of governing this little corner of the Empire has gone on under the same forms without material change. It is but natural that the 20,000 inhabitants of this twenty square miles of coral rock should wish to honor their aged constitution.

Originally founded by a shipwrecked company under Sir George Somers, destined for Virginia in 1609, these isolated islands have remained continuously under British rule.

Revenues are raised chiefly from tariff duties. No land taxes are levied by the colony. There is a very light tax on realty in the parishes and the proceeds are used for maintenance of the poor.

There are no divorce laws in Bermuda and only one breach-of-promise case was ever tried there. Most of the cases on the calendar involve bicycle stealing, assault, petty theft; there is little serious crime, though in a region where everyone rides a wheel the theft of a bicycle is regarded somewhat as horse stealing was in the West a few years ago.

There are old-timers who have never set eyes on a train or a trolley car; but of late they have had the satisfaction of seeing flying-boats circling through the air.

Innovations of any kind are apt to be looked on with some suspicion. The majority is conservative and that is perhaps why so much sentiment is attached to the coming celebration of the 300-year-old constitution.

A FISHERY NOT WORKED.

Great Possibilities In Capture of White Porpoise.

The capture of the white porpoise or the white whale or Beluga—which it is said abounds in the lower Gulf of St. Lawrence, is a department of the fishing industry which presents possibilities and is particularly attractive to investors of a speculative turn of mind. In years gone by this fishery was carried on at odd times, most extensively by the Hudson Bay Company, but never on any systematic basis. It is not known that anyone is now prosecuting the industry and therefore there is no standard to assure one that it could be carried on with success under prevailing conditions.

Some years ago the late Mr. Campbell McNab, associated with another gentleman, engaged in the industry. Their method of capture was a noise was quite novel, but most effective. A long lead was erected—a wall of stocks driven into the mud or sand and so made a discovery, and came running in the house to tell mother about it. "Oh, mother," he began, "you might as well get me a Prince Albert coat, a white vest and a tie. Aunt Helen is beginning to warm up to the minister."

"Cunning as a Fox."

In the opinion of trappers the fox is the most cunning and resourceful of all the wild animals. He often fools the most expert trapper and the truest and cunningest dog. The fox lives on small game, birds, eggs and poultry. He makes his den in sandy hillsides, and in it the female rears from three to seven puppies, which are born in the early spring. February is the season Reynard goes wooing, and he travels far and wide in search of a sweetheart, faithful to none, for his love is more fleeting than the footprints he leaves in the drifting snow. The fox's sense of smell is highly developed, and by it he detects the danger of the trap. The scent left by human hands and the scent left on the trap by other animals caught in it are quickly detected.

"A successful fox trapper must be a keen observer of details," writes C. A. Holmes, a special game protector. "He must realize that he is pitting his wits against one of the most cunning of animals that roam the 'silent places' of the hills and ralleys."

THE HUMBLE CORNCOB.

Used To Be Wasted. Now Found to Be Valuable.

Twenty million tons of corncobs will be produced on this continent this year. An average raised in Canada is a very large proportion of that gigantic pile. They are a waste product, utilized hitherto for scarce any purpose save fuel and tobacco pipes.

But soon it is going to be different, because the researches of the Government scientists have proved that there is wealth in corncobs. Put them through a few simple processes and they will yield various products of high commercial value.

One of these is "furfural," a substance which now sells at $12 a pound. It is a colorless liquid, with a strong but not disagreeable smell, which can be utilized for the making of a whole series of dyes, as well as for paints and lacquers.

Corncobs will yield 1½ per cent. of furfural. Thus a plant handling 100 tons a day could produce about a ton and a half of the stuff, the manufacturing cost of which would not exceed twenty cents a pound.

The furfural, however, will be only a by-product of the corncob factory. About one-third of the weight of corncobs is the woody stuff called "cellulose." This, as experiments have proved, can be mixed with wood pulp for making paper—40 per cent. of it for an equality of letter paper, 60 to 70 per cent. for newsprint and 50 per cent. for blotting paper.

The corncob cellulose can be used also for making dynamite in place of infusorial earth or other "dope." It will serve for electrical insulations and may suitably enter into the composition of plastic materials, for phonograph records and ever so many other purposes.

The same corncobs will yield 45 per cent. of a heavy solution of gums, utilizable as an adhesive. There is no better glue, and it is expected to prove a highly satisfactory substitute for silicate of soda in the manufacture of strawboard, wallboard and shoe containers. Indeed, it has already been tested for such use under practical mill conditions and found in every way suitable. As a sizing for walls and as mucilage for labels it is unsurpassed.

This wondeffful corncob glue can be manufactured at one-fourth the cost of the silicate of soda adhesive. It is not yet on the market, but soon will be. Likewise corncob acetic acid. Of this staple chemical the cobs yield 3 per cent.

It is reckoned that under present conditions 10 per cent. of the annual output of 20,000,000 tons of corncobs could be saved and utilized for the production of furfural, cellulose, adhesive and acetic acid, this being about the quantity shelled on farms. When the market for these products has developed sufficiently more cobs will be made available.

A Remarkable Fall.

Not all falls are so interesting as the one that the Arctic explorer, Vilhjalmur Stefansson describes in Harper's Magazine, which resulted from a misstep on the ice.

"I had just put my field glasses into their proper place," he says, "and was starting to walk down an ice hummock when I suddenly began to fall.

"Curiously enough, the first thing that occurred to me as I fell was the saying that people review their whole life while they are falling from precipices. The next was that evidently I was falling into a crevasse and that it did not seem right that an Arctic explorer should fall into a crevasse, which is the special prerogative of Antarctic explorers. The next thing I thought of was that my crevasse was evidently the result of ice cracking under stress. It probably occurred in a gale, and we had had several, one of them about two days before. If this crevasse was a week old, I should fall on hard ice. If it was two days old, I might fall into water, for it was sprinktime and ice was forming slowly. My rifle, which was strapped on my back, added to my momentum, so would make me go down rapidly should I strike water.

"All this cogitating was done while I was dropping fifteen feet; then I landed on glare ice. I remained motionless at first lest I break through the ice, but after thirty seconds or so I decided that if my himnet clothes fall had not broken the ice, then doubtless I could move without danger of breaking it now.

"After getting on all fours and disengaging the broken snowshoes from my feet, I stood up, although I was sore in several places. No bones were broken. Looking up, I could see the hole through which I had dropped. Since the hummock that I had climbed was oval, it was obvious that a short walk along the bottom of my crevasse would bring me out. When I had gone about forty-five yards, the crevasse was some nine feet deep and I was able to climb out."

The Thirteenth Commandment

By RUPERT HUGHES

Mrs. Romilly Finished Her Wholesale Order and Came Wheezing Out Like a Grand Old Automobile of an Early Model.

Bayard had carried heavier burdens than Clay, and under the sting of Leila's whip had taken greater risks for higher prizes. The crash in the street had found him so extended that he could not recover without additional help. That very morning one of his brokers had called on him for a renewal of margins. He had to have five thousand dollars or he would lose fifty.

Rebuffed from every door, Bayard had gone to Wetherell's office—a mysterious sort of place surrounded by guards and secret service men to ward off the menace of spies, real and imaginary.

Bayard had unusual difficulty in passing the lines. The reason he soon heard. A new man was in charge in Wetherell's place, a retired British officer whose natural and affected gruffness was aggravated by the unpleasant nature of his tasks. He had only one eye.

He made Bayard describe who and what he was and what he wanted. Only Bayard's desperation gave him strength to ask this old Cyclops for an advance on new contracts.

Bayard went away in a stupor. He had intelligence enough to feel that he could less safely attack Wetherell now than before. He would seem to be implicated in the fellow's malfeasance. He would only advertise to his creditors that his vaunted contracts were worthless. Business men will endure much to escape such publication of their wrongs.

Bayard kept his head high till he reached his own office. Then he fell into his chair and propped his elbows on his desk and gripped his hot brows in his hands as if he were holding his skull together. It is the business man's attitude of prayer.

It was thus that Daphne found him when she opened the door narrowly and closed it behind her as softly as La Tosca. She was beaming with affection and importance, and when at her mischievous "Ahem!" Bayard looked up she was so pretty that he forgot himself long enough to smile and rush forward to embrace her.

She was wondering how to state her errand when the telephone rang. It startled Bayard strangely. He caught it to his lips as a toper lifts a glass. He pressed the receiver to his ear and evidently recognized the voice that said "Hello" from somewhere.

He answered in monosyllables of the least importance, but Daphne heard gloom in them.

Bayard hung up the receiver, pushed the telephone away as a bitter cup, and laughed sheepishly.

"Great convenience, the telephone! Just learned that I've dropped more money than I ever hoped to have. 'For want of a nail the shoe was lost.' Oh well, it saves me from spending it foolishly. But if I'd had five thousand dollars— My God! if I'd had five thousand dollars."

Daphne could think of nothing more helpful to say than a casual, "How's Leila?"

"Don't ask me!" Bayard smiled. "Tell me. What can I do for you, honey, before I go to take some nasty medicine from the president."

"Nothing dear. I had to come downtown on an errand, so I thought I'd run in and say 'hello.'"

"Well, hello!"

He kissed her and patted her back with doleful tenderness and she went out of his office into the elevator. Its iron-barred door and its clanking chains gave it a congenial prison feeling, and the bottomless pit it dropped into seemed even more appropriate.

CHAPTER XXIV.

Daphne wanted to run away from her thoughts and she walked for a mile or two up the deep ravine of Broadway. She dared not go back to Mrs. Chivvis just yet with her bad news. She thought of asking Clay for a loan. She swept the appalling idea from her brain with a puff of derision. Besides, he was out of town, Bayard had said. She thought of asking Tom Duane for it. She tried to blow that idea from her mind, but it kept drifting back like a bit of stubborn chaff down. She could not outwalk it.

At length she grew so desperate that she stopped at a telephone booth and brazenly called up Duane's number. He chanced to be at home. When he heard her voice he cried:

"Oh Lord, it's good to hear you. Sing again, sing again, nightingale!"

"I'm no nightingale. I'm a business woman, offering you an investment."

She told him the whole story. The name of Mrs. Romilly made him whistle. "Old Gorgon Zola," he called her, and added, "You're a made woman," but that the clothes aren't made, and I can't make 'em till I get some money. Would you—could you advance me a little on the most excellent security?"

"How much do you want? Where shall I bring it?"

"Mail two—er—five hundred dollars to the shop, will you? And I can never thank you enough."

"Hush. It's me that thanks you. Don't you want more?"

"No, thanks."

"It will be there in the early mail and I may call round later to put a mortgage or something on the place."

"Good-by," she chuckled, and hung up the receiver. She was crying softly as she stole from the blessed booth, and she looked less like a successful business woman than ever.

Something made her think of Wetherell. She stopped off at Bayard's floor and rang the bell. Leila's new butler admitted her with pomp. Daphne walked past him into the drawing-room. Leila and Wetherell were standing there in heavy coats. They seemed to be a little shocked at seeing Daphne. She was horribly hurt at seeing them, but she chirruped:

"Just come in!"

"Just going out," Leila answered, kissing Daphne nervously.

"Where?" Daphne asked, with intrepidity, as she shook hands with Wetherell—a prize-fighter's preliminary handshake it was.

"Oh—er—just motoring about a bit."

"Thanks—I'd love it." Daphne dared to say, almost as much amazed as they were at hearing her accept the invitation that had not been given.

She was quite shameless from their point of view, but she felt that it would be unpardonable to let her brother's wife go unrebuked or at least unaided and unchaperoned on a cruise so perilous to reputation if not to character.

While she was at the miserable business she decided to make a good job of it. When they went down to the car she squeezed in between Leila and Wetherell. Leila blanched with jealousy and cold comfort.

They dined at Long Beach and watched the dancers, in sullen mood. Wetherell ordered much champagne and would not listen to Leila's pleas that he let it alone. He frightened her a little by his reckless mood, and Daphne began to dread the journey home in the dark with champagned hands on the steering wheel.

After Daphne and he had executed a funeral dance Leila was emboldened to step out with him. They talked very earnestly and he seemed to horrify her by what he said to her. Daphne could not imagine what it was. Bayard had not told her of Wetherell's downfall from power.

Wetherell confessed his disgrace to Leila in the dance, and Leila was sickened with the sordid outcome of her romance. She had played with fire and got soot on her hands. She quit the dance and asked to be taken home.

Wetherell felt that she had turned against him and he reached for the last of the wine to fling it down his throat. Leila grimly took it from his fingers and emptied it in the ice bucket.

"Chauffeurs and champagne are a bad combination," she laughed, but there was a sneer on her lips.

"Oh, very well!" Wetherell sneered in turn. He paid for the dinner and tipped the waiter with the lavishness of a bankrupt. He tipped lavishly the man who guarded his car, and swung out into the road with an instant speed that would have been prettier if there had been less danger.

Daphne and Leila were good sports, but they were not merry. Wetherell furnished all the merriment, and his was from wine and despair. It was the wine that brought out the truth. He had to tell Daphne what he had told Leila, of his misfortune with his bald old government.

He asked Daphne to explain to Bayard how sorry he was that he was involved in the crash.

"Your broth' Bayard's awf'ly nice fel', Miss Skip. He's got nicest li'l' wife in worl'. Perf'ly good li'l' girl. Straight as a string—straight as they make 'em. No nonsense about li'l' Leil'. I just love her—perf'ly hon'orble love. I'd do anything in worl' for Leil'—or li'l' Miss Daffy—or ol' broth' Bay'd. Tell him 'at, will you, like a goo' li'l' girl? Tell Bay' 'at, will-li'?"

Daphne grew furious. She felt now that she had justified her presence here. She held Leila fast in her embrace and commanded Wetherell. "Slow down at once! Do you hear? Slow down this car!"

Wetherell laughed: "Bless li'l' heart. I'm goin' take you home. You're quite shafe with me—quite. Man that's born to be hanged never drown or get automobilled—that's good word—automobilled—eh, what?"

They whipped round a somber jut in the road, and his searchlight painted instantly in white outlines against the black world a wagonload of sleepy children returning from some village church affair. They were singing drowsily, "Merrilee we ro-la-long-ro-la-long."

Daphne and Leila seemed to die at once.

Wetherell groaned, "Oh, my God, the li'l' chil'ren!"

There was nothing for Wetherell to do but what he did. He spun his wheel and drove his thunderbolt into an open concrete culvert. There was a furious racket. The car turned a somersault and crumpled in a shuddering mass.

Wetherell, pinioned under the wheel, was knocked this way and that and his beautiful head cracked on the concrete like a china doll's.

Leila was snatched from the car as if invisible hands had caught her exquisite body for a lash to flog a telephone pole with, then threw her into a ditch. Daphne was flung and battered and thrust under the car when it turned over. And then the gasoline spilled from the shattered tank and caught fire.

CHAPTER XXV.

Underneath the machine lay the relics of Wetherell, who would suffer no more here. Close by was Daphne and Skip, whom a brief unconsciousness gave a short furlough from torture. She was not alive enough to be afraid of the long, lean flames about the gasoline tank, though they kept springing at her like wolfhounds held in a weakening leash. They had not yet quite reached her, but they missed her less and less.

A small distance off, Leila lay still, in almost her first ungraceful attitude, oblivious for a few moments of the outrages the blind forces of momentum had wreaked on her with the fury of a Bill Sikes trying to beat a woman to death.

The chauffeurs and passengers of cars that drew up in lengthening queues ran to the scene of Wetherell's disaster.

At first they could not see Wetherell, but they saw Daphne and her peril, and they set frantically to work to drag her free. But she was so caught that they could not release her until they should remove the car. They pulled and heaved, but it was jammed into the culvert and the ditch so tight that they could not budge it, though they took turns rocking and surprised blistered hands and charred clothes.

At last one chauffeur fastened a chain to the rear axle of Wetherell's car and to the front axle of his, and, by alternate backing and swerving, dragged and hoisted Wetherell's car upward and rearward while other men snatched Daphne from beneath and away from the flames just as they were nibbling at her skirts.

At the same time they disclosed the body of Wetherell and with huge difficulty fetched it forth. Still others found Leila in a heap, a toy with broken joints.

At last the thing Daphne had known was the sensation of being shaken to death, a helpless mouse in a terrier's mouth. The next she knew was that she was seated on the edge of a ditch and leaning against the shoulder of a kneeling woman in evening dress.

A number of shadowy men and women wavered against the searing glare of the gasoline.

They arrived at last at a hospital. Daphne was lifted out and delivered into the possession of two curt young internes. She was stretched on a litter, carried feet foremost into an elevator, down a corridor to a room, and rolled out on a bed. Two nurses proceeded to undress her and bathe her. Then an older doctor came in and examined her injuries. She blazed with shame, one complete blush. But to him she was hardly more than a car brought to a garage. He nodded cheerfully and said:

"Not a bone broken, young lady, and no internal derangements that I can discover. A few burns, that's all, and a big shock."

"Is Leila hurt much?" Daphne mumbled.

"She is hurt a trifle worse than you. But she'll come round all right."

"I don't believe you!" said Daphne, and sighed, "Poor Bayard!"

"Who is Bayard?"

"My brother—her husband."

"Ah, the young man who was— The other young man was not your husband, then?"

Daphne shook her head. "He is no relation—a friend."

"Perhaps we'd better notify Bayard. What's his last name? Has he a telephone?"

Daphne muttered his name and number. Then her head was lifted, a capsule placed in her mouth, and a glass of water held to her lips. When she was restored to her pillow a sedative was within her to subdue the riot of her thoughts.

She wondered what Duane would think of her now. She remembered the money she had asked him to lend her. It would be in the morning's mail. But she would not be there to open it. Mrs. Chivvis might not dare to.

All her acquaintance began to march past Daphne's brain in review. Thoughts and half-thoughts and whimsies danced through her mind in a carnival of stupor and frenzy, while to the eyes of the nurses she lay still and slept.

In another room Leila was shrieking and fighting, whimpering and moaning, a torn gazelle under the claws and fangs of tigerish pain. At ruptly there came a lethal silence also from her. They had succeeded in dragging her at last.

* * * * * * *

When Daphne had left Bayard in the afternoon she had found that he was depressed, but not how deeply. She supposed that his money loss was only a failure of expected profits, or the mishap of an investment. She did not dream that he was crippled financially.

Bayard was so forlorn, so profoundly ashamed of his bad guesswork, that he could not bear to show his face at any of his clubs that night. He had boasted there too often of having bought heavily of the stock. He had persuaded too many of his friends to invest in it.

So he went where busy men go when other places are closed to them. He went home. When he reached his apartment he found that Leila had given the servants a night out.

Leila had left no word of her own plans. After a forlorn delay Bayard called for Daphne. She was gone, too, with no word of her return.

At last the telephone rang. A man's voice spoke and explained that it spoke from the hospital.

"Is Mr. Kip there? Is this Mr. Kip? Mr. Bayard Kip? Your wife is here, and your sister, and your friend Wetherell—automobile accident—out here on Long Island—pretty bad smash. Your wife's not very well—better come out—as soon as you can."

The world reeled. Bayard seized his hat, played a tattoo on the elevator bell, darted into the street, yelled at a taxicab with ferocity, got in, ordered the driver to "go like hell." He kept putting his head out to howl at him.

At the hospital he questioned the interne fiercely about Leila and Daphne. And had only vague answers. He did not ask about Wetherell, but the interne volunteered the news that he was dead.

That made the ultimate difference. Bayard stopped short in awe, his forehead cold as if a clammy hand had been laid on it. Death was at work. Where would he stop?

In the chill white aisle of the corridor his frenzy gave place to a sense of bitter cold. A chill white nurse led him past doors and doors to a room where in a white bed lay a chill white thing, a cylinder of cotton.

Leila's face was almost invisible in bandages; her whole body scissorssed and swaddled. She was an Egyptian princess mummied. For a moment her soul came out of the drug at his gasp of pity. It ran about inside its cocoon trying to find a nerve to pull or a muscle to signal to him outside. The mere lifting of her hand brought from her a moan of such woe as canceled all Bayard's grievances against her.

Once Bayard's resentments and jealousies were swept from his mind, his old love came back throbbing and leaping. His very soul bled and he dropped to his knees, his arm thrown across that bundle of wreckage which had been his choice among the world's beauties.

He was soon dragged from his communion with his once-more unconscious bride by the young doctor, who lifted him up with the unpracticed diplomacy of internes and led him aside, grumbling: "Say, what you trying to do? Kill her? She's weak and her heart's fluttering. Cheer her up if you can. If you can't, you can't stay. Better not stay, anyway."

Bayard apologized cravenly and promised better behavior, and was permitted to steal back to Leila. He took her one undamaged hand; it was as beautiful as the severed hand of a Greek statue, and as churlish white and cold.

The interne led him at length out into the corridor. And now Bayard remembered that he had also a sister, an only sister, in this same tavern of pain. His heart went out to her. He remembered, too, that they had a father and a mother to tell or deceive.

The interne assured him that Daphne's injuries were slight. She looked sad enough when he peered in at her, though she was far from the dreary estate of Leila. She was asleep, but she woke at the sound of his step, and, turning her head with effort, opened her eyes and smiled at him feebly and whispered his name, and beckoned to him with one weak finger.

Daphne's heart ached out to him; she hugged him as hard as her weak arms would let her. She searched her mind for comfort. She could think of nothing so comforting just now as a hearty, reassuring lie. She whispered:

"It's all my fault, honey. You see, Mr. Wetherell was taking me out for a ride. I met Leila. She told me you telephoned you weren't coming home for dinner. She looked so lonely that I asked her to come along and chaperon us. I'm to blame for it all. Can you ever forgive me?"

He was so grateful, so eager to be deceived, that he forgot her state and clenched her hand hard and kissed it in gratitude for a priceless boon. The nurse, returning, saw the deed and smiled, not knowing what joy Bayard was taking in absolving Leila of suspicion and loading himself with blame. At such a time we love to bear our own heads in shame and cast ashes upon our hair. The taste of ashes in the mouth is good at such a time.

Daphne's first visitor after Bayard was Mrs. Chivvis.

"Oh, my dear!" she murmured. "I read in the papers about your misfortune. Such a night as I had spent! I was so afraid for you! And to think that you were lying here in such pain! And I might have helped you."

Daphne smiled, and they clasped hands like the two splendid little business women they were.

"How's the eye?" Daphne asked.

"I haven't been there."

"It isn't open, then?"

"No, indeed. With you here?"

A HAUNTED ISLAND.

Beauty Spot In Muskoka Lakes Has Odd History.

The only name that the rock about half an acre in area, just one-third of a mile off the eastern side of Vankoughnet lake, is known by, is the Haunted Island.

Several years back, a young newly married American couple took up their summer home on the island, looking forward to all the pleasures, as a Muskoka Lake. Just as suddenly as they came was the rocky home abandoned. The young husband was drowned while enjoying a morning swim in the cool waters, and the heartbroken girl was left alone. Year after year, through all sorts of Canadian weather, the cottage has remained uninhabited.

Trespassers who have dared to make a landing on the Haunted Island have been forcibly kept off by its beauty. Not a thing was wanting in an ideal summer home. A shady verandah, now falling in decay, runs around three sides of the house. The windows and doors are barred, but occasionally prying hands have forced an opening. The sight that greets one is pathetic.

A huge American flag covers the whole end of the living-room, while college colors and pennants are tastefully nailed about the walls. Cutouts and pictures are also in evidence. Straight back wicker chairs sit silently around the table on which is a dish that at one time contained butter, the contents having not yet wholly disappeared. Cutlery, chinaware, together with bottled and canned food are dust-covered on shelves. A shaky stairway leads to a single room above that evidently was intended by the newly weds" to be their storeroom.

Two bedrooms adjoin the living-room and here is found the striking surprise of one's stolen visit. Clothes are found scattered about, and on the small dressers are found more personal belongings. Expensive bedsteads stand in silent testimony of the deep tragedy. The mattresses are hung from the ceiling and give the only impression that any care was taken in the hurried departure of the bride. The very finest of linen, and other bedclothes, are hoisted up over the beds in the same manner.

Just outside the front porch stands a thick pole on which is an elegant birdhouse erected between the two trees that find space to grow on the diminutive island. The whole rock, for that is all it is, has become weedy and untidy. A few paces further away is what remains of the laundry shed. Washtubs, boilers, and everything a housewife needs in that line are neatly arranged.

And then one invariably takes a peep into the inside of another wooden structure nearly as large as the house. A motor launch, sail-boat, canoe, and two rowboats are neatly racked. All the water craft are covered with dusty sheets and it is doubtful if they were ever used. And that isn't all. Fishing lines, nets, weather coats, accessories, and everything imaginable are in the assortment. What was once a solid landing place in front of the boathouse has been washed away, giving the island the appearance of being cut completely off from connections. Not a thing has been taken from the island by visitors, who regard the house and contents as almost sacred.

Different parties have endeavored to either rent or purchase the island but without avail. The wife, who spent only a short period in our Canadian beauty spot in Muskoka, cannot be personally located. And thus the Haunted Island remains, intact in every detail, to be devoured by the weather of Muskoka district. Visitors, whether they land from a rowboat or canoe, journey back to the hotel deep in thought as to where the girl is whose life was cut in twain.—Norman Albert in Toronto Star Weekly.

LONDON'S DRAWBACKS.

Criticism of Life In World's Greatest City.

"It is time that somebody said it. It is time that somebody painted the drawbacks and disabilities of life and friendship in London in their true colors," writes Mr. Cyril E. M. Joad in the Venturer.

"I speak of the spiritual color of our lives in London, and of the inevitable lack of all those qualities which make for the dignity and beauty of life and the stability of personal relationships. For talk about literature there is substituted chatter about literary personalities. What might in the country have been an analysis of the causes of labor unrest or the structure of society subsides into gossip about the propensities of labor leaders, or the sartorial peculiarities of Cabinet Ministers.

"The men who talk in the evening in London are men with tired minds. All day they have been whipping their brains into a vicarious activity; many have been engaged on creative work; all bring to the relaxation of after-dinner intercourse the fag-ends of jaded brains. In London one is perpetually tired. The fortress of the mind is continually battered by assaults that would take its interests by storm. London continually stimulates, but leaves the mind no space to concentrate on the stimuli it has received. Hence the feeling to which all Londoners are accustomed, the feeling that one must go away into the country to think.

"One must be let alone, given time to turn round, and like a dog who has captured a bone, must needs take it into a corner and meditate before consumption. And because London provides no breathing space in its innumerable calls upon the interest, the mind grows blunted, the freshness of perception is dulled, and the tired brains fail to respond. So friends, music, and literature lose their significance, and enjoyment becomes a weary round of duties.

"And this, then, is London disease: to confine the spontaneity of human intercourse within the framework of the Underground Railways, and to regulate relationships by the exigencies of pocket diaries. For what zest can there be in conversation, with the thought of a two hours' tube journey to remote suburbs, looming like an impending fate over the heads of the tired talkers, what dignity in a life when one steps continually from pavement to bus, and from bus to lift, in which one can only visit one's friends at the cost of burrowing like a mole in the bowels of the earth; and when the Absolute itself must give way to the urgency of the last train from Waterloo?"

Select the Breeding Poultry Stock.

In selecting the male always look for a vigorous, active bird, whose head is broad with a comb of bright red color. The sides of the shanks or legs should show considerable red color. Be sure that such a bird has a well-muscled breast that is straight. If possible secure one bred from a laying hen.

All that has been said of the male applies to the female. Most laying hens do not develop much internal fat on what is commonly called a crop behind. Those of the yellow-legged breeds lose much of the color, and those broods having white ear lobes show very little, if any, cream color in them if the bird is a good layer. —Ontario Agricultural College Notes.

What Prominent Ontario Women Say

Tillsonburg, Ont.—"I found Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription very beneficial during expectancy. I felt quite poorly, was nauseated and sick, could not eat anything and I was extremely nervous and weak. I took 'Favorite Prescription' and it soon stopped the nausea, my appetite returned, also my strength and I was soon feeling fine and strong. My baby was strong and healthy and has always been so. I consider 'Favorite Prescription' a great help to the expectant mother and am glad to recommend it."—MRS. AMOS MILLS, Box 238.

A HAMILTON WITNESS

Hamilton, Ont.:—"A few months ago I was stricken down and was confined to bed about ten days. My strength all left me. It was my first illness since a child. I lost five pounds and felt awfully weak afterward. I could hardly do my work. I was advised to try Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription in tablet form. I tried a couple of bottles and before I knew it, I was well and strong and had gained 9½ pounds. I can recommend Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription to ladies one up."—MRS. E. MARTIN, 397 Dundurn St.

After suffering pain, feeling nervous, dizzy, weak and dragged down by weaknesses of her sex—with eyes sunken, black circles and pale cheeks—such a womap is quickly restored to health by the Favorite Prescription of Dr. Pierce. Changed, toor in looks, for after taking Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription the skin becomes clear, the eyes brighter, the cheeks plump. It is purely vegetable, contains no alcohol.

Apples as Feed for Stock.

Apples unmarktable or of very low market value may be regarded as a substitute for silage, and a useful place found for them in the farm dietary, but their limitations to replace other feeds seems to be recognized and a ration of sufficient nourishment and desirable ratio planned, says S. N. Hamilton, Assistant Chemist, in an Experimental Farm note.

Compared with shorts at $60 per ton apples are worth $2 to $3 per ton for feed. For dairy cows they have about 40 per cent. of the value of corn silage and apple pomace is practically equal to the same weight of corn silage. The nutrient content of apples cannot be greater than that of most of our farm roots, certainly not equal to so-called sugar mangels or sugar beets.

Contrary to the supposition that the feeding of apples interferes with the milk flow there is data to show that apples used rationally do not injuriously affect it. The mistake made has probably been to feed apples as a substitute for more nutritious feed, for example, meal or hay and not merely to replace the succulent part of the ration, since they are low in protein they should be used with protein-rich feeds.

THE CARE OF SILK GARMENTS

Vigorous Brushing Will Mar Sheen of Fabrics—May be Dry Cleaned at Home.

In these days of the H. C. L., it behooves all to take the best care of clothes. Since one or two dresses must do the work of a half dozen in the present-day wardrobe those dresses must be kept in the best possible condition.

It is easy enough to keep a wash dress looking crisp and fresh but for silk it is a more difficult matter.

Never brush silks with a stiff brush, since too vigorous brushing will mar the sheen of the fabrics. Use a piece of velvet or a very soft brush.

You may dry-clean your silk garments at home if you are careful to use gasoline and other inflammable liquids out-of-doors where there will be no danger of an explosion. It is advisable, however, to send the better frocks to the professional cleaner since he has special appliances for this work.

For cleansing washable silk garments, use suds of a pure white soap or, soap chips and cold or lukewarm water. If your white silk waists are washed in such suds, rinsed in water of the same temperature and dropped in a bath towel to absorb the extra moisture, and then pressed with a warm iron they will not turn yellow for a long time.

Silks should be pressed only with a moderately hot iron. Never place the iron directly upon the fabric. A piece of cheesecloth should be placed between the silk and the irons. In any case the iron should be used as little as possible either in the making or afterward.

The dressing in most silk socks or stockings tends to stiffen the threads, hence they should be washed before they are worn.

You may often remove wrinkles from a silk dress by hanging it over a bathtub filled with water hot enough to make steam. The frock should then be hung to dry where nothing will touch it.

Crocheted Wool Flowers.

If you crochet, and have an idle summer hour on hand, why not make some very stunning gay wool flowers? Scattered merrily over a black taffeta frock they are both unusual and smart. And they are super so pretty on gingham frocks or sport suits. Be sure to use a heavy yarn, and work in some of the very new colors—cerise, capucine, geranium, jade or rust.

Like Silk Ruches.

Soft ruches as used on the collars of organdie are used to trim the cuffs of summer waists of voile. Nothing fluffy is worn now that will show dust the sleeves are cut close to the wrists. [illegible] quite ruchings of

APRON AND FROCK

Designs Effectively Carried Out in English Prints.

When White Organdie Fichu Is Used the Ends Are Tucked Under the Band.

Any number of pretty flowered voile frocks have real aprons of organdie, the strings of which form a sash. Some of these have fichus as well as aprons. Such designs are most effective, observes a fashion writer, when carried out in the fresh, crisp-looking English prints of small design. The aprons are not at all like the panel skirts which have come to be known as apron skirts. They are real aprons, just like a maid's apron, with big strings tying in the back. When a white organdie fichu is used the ends are tucked under the apron band. Sometimes, when the apron is not used, the fichu crosses at the waistline and continues to form a big sash in the back.

A shade of blue chambray known as blue bonnet blue and which is somewhat darker than a French blue, makes very pretty morning dresses for the country. With some white linen and rickrack braid to be used as trimming, very pretty designs may be easily worked out.

A pleasing way of making such a frock is to cut it with a long waist portion hanging loose like a smock and attach to it a straight little skirt. A loose panel gathered with a heading may be placed at either side, the panels, heading and all, edged with the rickrack braid and the frock sashed with white linen. These blue chambray dresses are very pretty made with frilled white organdie aprons.

CONFIDENCE AND CO-OPERATION.

There is only one paper in Canada owned by the farmers and circulating among the farmers, namely, "The Farmers' Sun." It fights the farmers' battles politically, gives more accurate market quotations than any other paper in the Dominion, features other agricultural news, as well as the activities of the U. F. O., such as their co-operative and other kindred problems. No paper in Canada furnishes more accurate news reports of matters which interest the farmer, nor is any paper more fearless and outspoken editorially than The Farmers' Sun. The paper is published twice a week, so that a subscriber gets one hundred and four issues for $1.50. Farmers, subscribe for a paper which you own and have confidence in. Send $1.50 to-day to The Farmers' Sun, Toronto.

Iron In Australia.

The recent discovery of enormous deposits of iron ore at Yampi sound, in northwestern Australia, is of great importance to the world. A lode several hundred feet thick and over 100 feet wide runs many miles, through two islands. Something like 100,000,000 tons of ore, with an average of 65 per cent. pure metallic iron, is actually in sight; and the situation is such that the quarried material can be delivered by chutes directly into ships' holds.

The world's consumption of iron is, of course, tremendous, and is steadily increasing. At present the supply is obtained from a few great deposits of rich ore here, but these will not last indefinitely, and, when they have been exhausted, mankind will be compelled to fall back upon low-grade ore. This will mean higher cost of extraction and a corresponding rise in the price of iron.

Iron is in reality the most precious of the metals, inasmuch as it is the one most necessary to the human race. Our modern civilization might be said to be based upon it. Fortunately it is very plentiful. It is the chief giver of color to earth and rock. Nearly all substances contain it. It circulates in the blood of animals and pervades the juices of plants. The black specks to be observed in any handful of beach sand are magnetic iron ore.

Many years ago a railroad was built for the purpose of fetching iron ore from the mines of the Vermilion Mountains, in the Lake Superior region. A cut through the Mesada range revealed the greatest iron deposit in existence, but the ore appeared in such unfamiliar shape that at first it was not recognized. It was soft, gravelly stuff, which now is dug out with steam shovels. Experts say that nowhere else does the crust of the earth contain so large a mass of iron.

Explorers have been astonished to find in the wilds of Africa savages acquainted with the art of getting iron from its ores and working it. To smelt the ore, they use a primitive blast furnace of baked mud, with charcoal for fuel and bellows to engender the requisite heat. It seems altogether likely that knowledge of these processes was originally derived by their ancestors in prehistoric days from the Arabs and Phoenicians, who then, as in later times, overran most of Africa.

Her Own Business.

A story illustrating the reticence of the Scottish regarding their private affairs is told by Ian Maclaren. A train was at a railway station, when a porter put his head into a carriage and called out, "Any one in this car for Doun? Change for Doun! Any one for Doun?" No one moved, and in a few minutes the train was speeding along, not to stop again for nearly an hour. Then an old Scotswoman turned to a lady sitting near her, and said, "I'm for Doun; but I'd no tell that mad so."

CANADA'S TILLABLE LAND.

Cultivated Area Is Only One-Sixth of What Is Available.

Of the entire portion of the earth's surface that is considered possible of being brought under cultivation, only one-third is as yet being tilled, and this is taken by statisticians as an indication that it will be a long time before the population of this world will run short of food, for want of land on which to grow it. There are countries, however, that have come near to the limit of their possibilities as regards their ability to provide food for their people from the tillable area they contain, and for this reason they are forced to look to other countries for their future food supply. Grain supply, more especially wheat, may be taken as an indication of how the nations of the world stand with regard to their food supply, and since the reports of the International Institute of Agriculture show Europe as a whole, to be a grain-importing continent, it may be reckoned that most of the countries of Europe are at any time over-populated in proportion to their food producing capacity. This season, the prospect in Western Europe is of a good grain harvest, and an appreciably smaller importation of grain than has been necessary in any of the past six years. Notwithstanding this increase in home production, the European countries that have been importers of grain in the past will continue to import to a considerable extent for all time and, for years to come, the farmers of the continent of North America will benefit largely by this situation, the losers under the circumstances being the Russians, who will be a long time in getting their production up to the level of pre-war years when they were of importance as a wheat-exporting nation.

Judging by reports of estimated supply and demand for wheat in the various countries of the world this year, Canada will be in a good position to realize on this season's crop of wheat and other grains. The United States acreage of wheat is far below that of last year, as is her acreage of all other grains than corn. Canada's grain acreage is also reduced, but not to so great an extent as that of the United States, while latest estimates of the yield of grain crops in Canada shows that it will be normal or above. Grain prospects in the Canadian West have improved greatly since early spring, while the only trouble with eastern grain is the relatively small amount of damage done to wheat by Hessian fly in Western Ontario.

Taking one crop with another, Canada's success in wheat-growing and in the growing of barley, oats and rye, is most heartening, as compared with that of other countries, and as Canada has but one-sixth of her possible agricultural land under cultivation, as compared with the average of one-third for the world as a whole, her chances of advancement through her grain production is perhaps the most important item to the credit of the country. Closely following her wheat production in importance is Canada's opportunity to increase and improve her live stock holdings, while numerous other farming enterprises that might easily be carried on successfully, are well worth considering. It is no wonder then, that the Natural Resources Intelligence Branch, in announcing the publication of lists of farm lands for sale, declares that among the natural resources of Canada agricultural land is by far the most important.
